The responsibility of businesses to respect human rights

On 7 January 2014, a letter from the Korean government to its citizens in Cambodia, conveyed through the Korean Embassy, indicated that Korean garment manufacturers were fully aware that the Cambodian government was preparing to intervene to resolve the strikes. Moreover, it suggested that Korean business representatives spoke to the Cambodian military about taking extra measures to protect Korean companies.

The reliance by Korean businesses on Cambodian military police to resolve protests would be in clear conflict with the responsibility of businesses to respect human rights and to exercise due diligence around the possible human rights implications of their actions.⁸
